THE GROWTH OF A CHILD'S LIBRARY

Did you ever reflect on the growth and life history of your private library? I don't mean your present professional library but that small collection of books which you owned and used to cherish in your childhood. Do you still remember the very first book you got as a youngster? Of course, You should except the Bible. You probably will not regard your ABC-book as the stone of your library.

If I remember correctly, my very first book came into my possession when I was about six and it was one of the series of Leatherstocking Tales. It was followed by some surreptitiously acquired pamphlets relating to the adventures of Rinaldo Rinaldini and other famous bandits. Some time afterwards I found a treasure in a heap of books discarded from the library of a monastery where I had once served as an altar boy. The priests were of Italian origin, and my collection became rich in psalm books, Breviaria and religious treatises written in Latin and Italian.

During the early part of my high school years, this private library received a generous gift from my father who gave me permission to search the family trunk and the armarium and to remove from them whatever I liked. When I was about 12 years of age, more than one hundred books ranked on the shelves of my bookcase, books which I arranged and re-arranged, stamped and labeled. Soon, however, I was robbed of my treasured collection. One of my classmates suggested that we should amalgamate our private collections, and, with the reservation of our property rights, we should establish a lending library. I listened to him and transferred my books to his home, which was supposed to be the central lending office. I never saw them again. I was the treasurer of the library fund, which amounted to 20 pennies; eighteen of the pennies was my own donation (in order to have something of which to be the treasurer) and two pennies were contributed by the "comptroller" to save his position. At the end of the school and fiscal year, when the central lending library was finally and irrevocably lent, the treasurer and the comptroller decided to break the china pig, and to finance an expeditionary walk into the neighboring country. So the library fund went into forbidden cigarettes accompanied by hot-dogs and horse-radish.

The people of Alexandria could not have felt much worse after the destruction of their famous library than did I in that bookless summer vacation. Yet the renaissance of my library was much closer than I thought. At the beginning of the next school year, a pious priest, who was the whole staff of the large Diocesan Library of the Archbishop at X., and a friend of my parents, asked me to help him in shelving, and cataloging. Here was a library which I thought to be the largest in the country: there were book-cases 40 or maybe 50 feet tall, with two galleries running around them, there were spiral stair-cases built in massive stone walls leading to the upper portions of the worm-eaten baroque bookshelves, there were old Latin books with red-lettered titlepages and woodcuts. Any time I wanted, I could get the key from the priest, and I could touch the books, and look at the miniatures of medieval manuscripts. I am free to say that I had the grandest time of my life.

For my services, I received duplicates from the library. I still remember the first one, an Elsevir edition of De bello Jugurthino by Sallustius. I keep it now in my china cabinet. There were many others which came along, all the Roman classics, a set of Pliny, a copy of Josephus Flavius, the Ars Amandi of Ovid, the Epigrams of Martial and many others. Latin gradually became my second native language. And there came other books in other languages, which urged me to study grammars and dictionaries. There was a long set of the "Je sais tout", a French magazine of popular science, from which I became acquainted with art, the theater, and many odd things an adolescent boy may be interested in. The culmination of my delight was an old encyclopaedia, a strange one indeed. It had five volumes for the letter 'A' and only one volume for the letters from P to Z. I began to read it and copied in a notebook all the bibliographical references that I found at the end of the chapters. Gradually this notebook became a sort of Index-Catalogue, or a union catalog to the literature of many subjects.

With the growth of my library it became more and more difficult for me to get quick information from my books. I had to glance through the contents and indices of many of these in order to find some lines on famous persons, on historical events, on the various prehistoric men, on sulfuric acid, on dynamos, or on whatever I was momentarily interested in. Well! I needed a general index to all the books in my library, an index that would be a pool of the indices of individual books. Meanwhile, I became a big lad, and my interest was attracted by my medical studies, and the study of life itself had more fascination than the classics or the dictionaries and encyclopaedias. So, sad to say nothing came of my private Index-Catalogue.
